Many people believe in fate, especially about their relationships. They think if two people are meant to be together, they will be together. Otherwise no matter how hard they try, it won't work. This fate controls the result.

Some people also believe chemistry is the most important thing for a relationship. The chemistry can be the fate, or an attraction which happens almost instantly. Once the chemistry is there, everything will be easy. If there is no chemistry, it is just a waste of time to continue with the relationship.

However if we look at real life, we can easily see the power of the personality which controls our attitude, influences our perception and judgement. Certainly it drives or holds us back from happiness.

For instance, some people have a personality light and happy personality. They usually take almost all things lightly. They don't get upset easily, they don't remember very well no matter if it is a good, or bad experience. They can open arms and heart to people.

Opposite to them are some people who can never relax well. They think a lot, always being cautious, sensitive and analytical. Whatever they do, they seek perfection. The things they do must be perfect and the partner they look for also should be perfect.

We also see some people who have a strong-willed and controlling nature. They like to be in control of everything, including their relationship.

Then opposite to these people are the ones who just want to relax, taking everything easy. They are not desperate for anything. People need to push them, some times push hard, then they will move couple of steps. In a dating situation, they are not creative or motivated to try different things. Some of them never even change their favourite restaurant and the dishes they chose for decades. For them, the ideal life is no change and no stress.

Interestingly personality also influences our physical attraction towards another person. We can like someone who is not regarded as good looking, or we can instantly reject someone even before knowing them.

Some people say this is sixth sense, or chemistry. But I say it is personality compatibility. Some personality are compatible with us, while some are not. . These compatibilities are not just demonstrated at the things we do together, it almost takes instant reaction when two people meet.

The good news about that is personality compatibility is not the fate. As long as we understand our own personality and the personality of the people we are dealing with, we can know why and how to work with them. In a way, we can even create the chemistry.

In next few articles, I like to explore different personalities and how to deal with people with that understanding.
