Behind a big man, there is a little boy

When Belinda rang me and told me she and Frank were going to get married, I was little surprised, but certainly very happy for them.

Frank was a good looking and successful businessman. He was enthusiastic, happy and very active. In the past, we introduced some young, funky women to him. He took them out and treated them nicely but had no interest in marrying them. Some women even accused him of being a playboy.

Belinda seemed quite opposite to Frank. She was down to earth, hardworking, shy and quiet. She didn't like socialising. Apart from socialising with a few good friends, she never went to parties, or clubs. She is not very fashionable, either. The fact is, her clothes are a little bit old fashioned.

Some time ago, we had a party. I arranged for Belinda to sit next to Frank. At the party, Frank was excited. He talked loudly, making jokes. Belinda sat there quietly. As usual, she was shy. No one seemed to notice her existence. I wasn't sure how much these two talked to each other in the party.

Outside of my expectations, the next day Frank rang me, asking for Belinda's details and contact number. He was interested in her. Out of curiosity, I asked him what happened. He told me, at the party he noticed Belinda was very quiet. While he was talking to others, Belinda quietly took his pair of glasses from the table and cleaned them. Then she quietly put them back. No one seemed to notice this small action, but Frank saw it. From such a small action, Frank saw a person, who had much kindness in her nature.

I asked him why he didn't put a wedding ring on those pretty women he had taken out before. He told me they were too demanding, always wanting him to talk the way they like, or doing the thing they asked for. He didn't like bossy women. He didn't need a mother to tell him what to do.

Now we know the end of that story. They got married and are very happy and content. They also have a beautiful son.

Frank has taught me something about men, and their needs and values.

First thing I learnt was, good looks are not a guarantee to success and being humble should not be an obstacle in finding the right person. Although every man has different needs when looking for a partner. Some men need beautiful women to boost their ego. But men like Frank need more. That is another thing I learnt.

The word of "man" to women means masculinity, confidence, carefree, able to fix everything. If a man couldn't deliver those characteristics, a woman may ask "are you a man?". However many women do not understand, so often behind the big man, there is a little boy. The little boy will be naughty sometimes. The little boy needs to be praised, needs to be cared for. At work Frank is confident and successful, but behind his workplace, he also needs someone to care about him. He needs someone to let him to be who he is, instead of correcting him all the time. He could be naughty, cheeky, like a little boy. He doesn't need a woman to tell him "stop it!". Belinda won his heart because she delivered his needs. She gave him the freedom to be who he was. In another words, Belinda was a wife, never trying to be a mother, or a big sister.

Inside women, there is the nature of a mother. This mothering nature is not only on display when they deal with children, but also in their relationship with men. They like to change their children and their men. They like to repeat their words to their children and their men. They like to tell their children and their men what is right and what is wrong. Sometimes what they do is good. But I believe to some men it can kill the romance.

I hope more women can remember the "little boy" character when dealing with their boy friends, or husbands. Once the needs are satisfied, they will return the love. By Eva Chen
